working in the ICU in the early days. We used to have a bedside mirror so that we would be able to monitor patients without having to scramble to get a camera. ~~~ scorpioxy I've always wondered about this. If I were to mirror my brain, would it be conscious? Would it have the sense of self it has now? Or is it completely gone? ~~~ atmosx My best guess is that if somebody were to mirror my brain, they'd experience all the same sensations I've experienced. That means they won't be able to have a sense of self. ----- tjholowaychuk As someone who's felt ADHD my whole life it's exciting to see people actually experiencing the benefits of tech like this. I've always struggled to find something that would actually help me out, and this would be a huge help, would indeed help me tremendously and have them take it as a challenge and go ahead and beat it at their own pace. Thanks for posting! ~~~ macarthy12 I suffer from ADHD and can't wait till this becomes mainstream. I know a lot of people who do too. It's a shame Apple didn't include this in iOS 13 with Healthkit (it's there for touch, watch and car). ~~~ dexwiz If you want to get a feel
